Looking for a real cutup? Yup, that's me

Chicago-based Jerry Soverinsky is riding coast-to-coast and documenting his trip weekly in the Herald.

By JERRY SOVERINSKY
SPECIAL TO THE HERALD

Sit down for a drink with any cyclist (not too late, most are in bed by 9 p.m.), and you'll be bombarded with tales of harrowing on-the-road injuries: car doors that slam them into busy street traffic, resulting in a separated shoulder (been there, done that); mountain descents that turn frightful, as gravel patches send them tumbling end-over-end (been there, done that); or the all-too-common, low-flying bird mistakes bike helmet for giant bread crumb, causing rider to panic and wipe out, in the process knocking over a sidewalk produce stand (alas, been there, done that).

But my injury earlier last week, on the eastern border of Montana ... well, this one is no Indiana Jones tale.

My day had been nearly perfect. I awoke in my Montana motel, excited to find the breakfast room featuring premium sugar cereals (no bran for me, Cap'n Crunch all the way!). And finally, temperatures had receded from the upper 90s, with overcast skies yielding a high of 72 degrees. Ideal for cycling.

I had virtual free reign of the state road, as traffic in remote eastern Montana was nearly nonexistent. This made the heavy tailwind all the more enjoyable, and I was cycling at a great pace. In fact, I decided to head for Williston, N.D., which would amount to roughly 100 miles for the day.

At the 70-mile mark, I stopped at a roadside diner for lunch. No. 1 item on the menu: grilled cheese. Could the day get any better? After finishing my second sandwich, I decided that the day had to be captured, and so I got out my digital camera and started framing the shot. I wanted to include the open prairie, diner, my bicycle and empty lunch plate in the picture, and was bouncing around excitedly for the proper angle.

While backing up, I slammed my leg into a roadside planter — a half-barrel rimmed with a rusted steel band — and immediately howled like a Montana coyote. The steel band had sliced open my leg, and there was a gash the size of an elephant's ear carved out of my flesh.

I bandaged my leg and cycled to Williston, 28 miles away, cursing myself en route. I parked my bike at the hospital and entered the ER, where a doctor proudly described my cut as "quite the flapper." Ten stitches and a tetanus shot later, I got back on my bike and headed for my motel, which I reached at the day's 102-mile mark.

Ten stitches. Tetanus shot. Great tailwind. All crucial elements in a cyclist's tale. But the roadside planter? Well, that's just between us.
